

Relationship Inventory

1. List all the dating or other romantic relationships you have had regardless of how they turned out. List them in order from earliest to latest and give the time period they lasted and your age, including where they overlapped. Do not include brief encounters with prostitutes, massage workers, baristas etc. unless you became preoccupied with one of them in fantasy or attempted to form a connection with one of them. Do include relationships with chat or phone partners and sexual acting out partners (e.g. sex buddies) if they went on for some time (i.e. more than a few of weeks).

Relationship	Time Period in Your Life

Now describe some typical characteristics of your relationship history such as short vs. long relationships, more than one relationship at a time, becoming obsessed with someone without actually getting into a relationship, etc. Include your opinion of how this pattern may have changed over time, e.g. did you become more isolated? Did you have more self-destructive relationships? Etc.

2. For each relationship on your list briefly describe how it started:

- ❖ Who initiated the relationship?
- ❖ What things got you interested? What was the hook?
- ❖ Were you similar in age?
- ❖ Were you similar in level of life accomplishments or success?
- ❖ Were you similar in financial resources?

Who Initiated? The “Hook”? Relative Age? Relative Success? Financial ?

Now look over these answers and describe the most common pattern by which you became interested in someone and connected with them. Include the most frequently occurring characteristics of your partner choices.

3. Describe the process of getting to know each of the people on your list.

- ❖ What did you do together while getting acquainted?
- ❖ What interests and activities did you have in common?

Process of Getting Acquainted	Interests and Activities Shared

Now look over these answers and describe your most typical pattern of pursuing some kind of relationship.

4. For each person on your list describe your sex life together.

- ❖ Who initiated sex or tried to?
- ❖ What was your level of sexual interest in the person?
- ❖ Did you talk about having sex before you began having sex?
- ❖ Did you have any basic understandings between you about sex?

How Sex Started	Your Level of Interest	Talked Beforehand?	Shared Ideas Re: Sex?

Now look at these answers and describe your sexual style in relationships. For example, were you usually having sex with your partner but thinking of something else? Was there an atmosphere of sexual mistrust and suspicion? Did you use your partner sexually in some way? Did you attempt to bring your addictive acting out behavior into the sexual relationship with your partner (e.g. acting out roles, watching porn together, wanting to bring third parties into the act, using sex toys to further your fantasies, etc.)?

5. For each relationship on your list give a brief description of the way you interacted with each other.

- ❖ How did you share your feelings?
- ❖ How did you solve problems?
- ❖ What underlying roles did you play in relation to each other (e.g. father, wayward child, ships in the night, etc?)

Expression of Feelings	Problem-Solving Process	Roles You Played

Now describe the day-to-day feeling between you and whomever you were involved with. Did you typically avoid any self-revelation? Did you placate or give in to your partner only to feel resentment? Did you avoid each other? Was there emotional or physical violence?

of going to strip clubs and massage parlors but I sooner or later resumed this pattern in secret. In the course of the relationship I played the role of the good lover and partner, but I cared less and less for this person. I felt that sexual acting out was my legitimate outlet. There were a lot of crises and a lot of arguments and I always ended up placating my partner. I would feel resentful and look for a way to get out of the relationship, often cheating and openly flirting with other people. If I felt a partner was unhappy and threatening to leave, I would break up with them first in order to avoid having to confront any issues. I was never able to be honest about what was really going on with me.”

(b) “I chose a partner because I thought they “looked good on paper.” They were attractive and accomplished and they seemed to love me, but I was not actually attracted to them. I knew all along that I would probably continue to have a separate sexual life involving anonymous sexual encounters and voyeurism. We would have a relationship that seemed outwardly OK and we would get along well for the most part. There were always many things in my past that I never told my partner and that I was very ashamed of. I always felt “less than” and my sexual acting out made me feel worse. I was depressed but I didn’t talk about it. Over time I got careless and my acting out got more bizarre. I wanted to change something but I didn’t know how.”

(c) “I was always romantically obsessed with some person even in high school but it never worked out. I always got rejected or felt humiliated in some way. I was increasingly interested in my secret sexual fantasy life of Internet pornography. I would continue to develop fantasies about people at work or on the street and would sometimes try to strike up an acquaintance with an extremely attractive person. Once or twice I had brief dating situations but it was all about sex and they were not ever real prospects for bonding or forming a partnership. I never really thought about how to go about meeting appropriate people and never considered what I had to offer someone as a friend or lover—only what I wanted. I resented the fact that I could not have a partner who measured up to my fantasies, and felt sorry for myself. I was in a self-perpetuating rut and didn’t have any idea how to proceed.”
